IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

ERNEST EVANS, et al.,

No. C 13-02477 WHA

Plaintiffs,

v.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART
AND DENYING IN PART
MOTION TO DISMISS

HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY, et al.,

Defendants.

INTRODUCTION

In this trademark dispute, defendants move to dismiss all claims. For the reasons below, the motion is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

STATEMENT

Defendant Hewlett-Packard Company is a multinational technology corporation. Defendant Palm, Inc. is allegedly a wholly-owned subsidiary of HP. “The Chubby Checker” is the name of a risqué software application offered for sale and download on the HP App Catalogue, a web-based store operated by Palm and HP. The app purports to estimate the size of a man’s genitals based on his shoe size. The name “Chubby Checker” is thus used as a vulgar pun.

Plaintiff Ernest Evans is and has long been known by his stage name “Chubby Checker.” The complaint describes him as “a legendary musical entertainer” with “icon-status.” Plaintiffs The Last Twist Inc. and The Ernest Evans Corporation own various 1 registered marks associated with the name “Chubby Checker” (Amd. Compl. ¶¶ 15, 30, Exhs.

2 A–G).

3 The complaint alleges that defendants began offering the Chubby Checker app for sale
4 on the HP App Catalogue in October 2006. Defendants allegedly did so with actual knowledge
5 of plaintiffs’ marks and actual knowledge that no plaintiff had consented to the use of the 6 marks. Defendants nonetheless knowingly and willfully advertised, marketed, and sold the app
7 in violation of those marks. In order for an app to be offered for sale on the HP App
8 Catalogue, defendants employed an “application and approval process and knowingly decided 9 to approve, accept, upload, host, market, advertise, sell and make provisions for the 10 maintenance and updating of ‘The Chubby Checker’ app” (id. at ¶ 29). Plaintiffs allege that at 11 all relevant times, defendants “maintained primary control” of the use of the name and mark,
12 as well as control over the revenues generated from sales of the app. The complaint does not 13 allege, however, that defendants were responsible for the creation or naming of the app.

14 In September 2012, plaintiffs informed defendants of the alleged infringement by way
15 of a cease-and-desist letter, though the complaint alleges that “[a]s of the filing of this law suit 16 [on February 12, 2013], the infringement continues” (id. at ¶ 37). The complaint alleges 17 claims for: (1) federal trademark infringement, (2) federal trademark dilution, (3) federal 18 unfair competition, (4) common law unfair competition, (5) common law trademark
19 infringement, (6) unauthorized use of name or likeness under Pennsylvania law, and (7)
20 unauthorized use of name or likeness under California law. Defendants now move to dismiss 21 all claims.

22 ANALYSIS

23 To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter,
24 accepted as true, to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556
25 U.S. 662, 663 (2009). A claim is facially plausible when there are sufficient factual allegations
26 to draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. While a 27 court “must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true,” it is “not bound to 28

1 accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.” Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly,
2 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007).

3 1. TRADEMARK INFRINGEMENT.

4 Defendants argue that plaintiffs have failed to adequately state their various federal and 5 common law claims for trademark infringement. This order disagrees.

6 The crux of defendants’ argument is that the complaint only attempts to plead claims
7 for contributory infringement and not for direct infringement. To be liable for contributory
8 infringement, defendants argue that they must have had actual knowledge of the infringement
9 and yet continued to sell the app. Defendants urge that the complaint fails to allege either that 10 defendants knew of the infringement or that defendants continued to sell the app after 11 receiving plaintiffs’ cease-and-desist letter. This claim is incorrect.

12 The complaint specifically alleges that when defendants chose to place the app in 13 commerce, defendants had “actual knowledge” that none of the plaintiffs had consented to the 14 use of the name “Chubby Checker,” and that defendants had “full knowledge” of plaintiffs’
15 marks from the beginning of their approval process (Amd. Compl. ¶¶ 29–30). Defendants swat 16 these allegations aside because some are made “upon information and belief.” But the 17 complaint alleges sufficient facts to support these beliefs, such that the claims are plausible.
18 For example, the complaint alleges that the Mr. Evans is famous and internationally known by 19 his stage name and registered trademark “Chubby Checker.” The complaint alleges that the 20 app catalog maintained by defendants advertised the lascivious nature of the app and that 21 defendants “maintained primary control over the use of the name and mark ‘The Chubby 22 Checker’ in connection with . . . the offending app.” The complaint further alleges that 23 defendants employed a detailed application and approval process for the app (id. at ¶¶ 1, 24 15–18, 27–31). Construed favorably to the plaintiffs, these allegations are sufficient to permit 25 an inference that defendants knew, or could have reasonably deduced that the owner of the 26 Chubby Checker mark would never have consented to license the mark for such a vulgar
27 purpose.
28

1 This is sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) and the pleading
2 standards of Iqbal and Twombly. Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' trademark
3 infringement claims is therefore DENIED.

4 2. SECTION 230 OF THE COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT.

5 Defendants argue that plaintiffs' remaining state law claims are barred by Section 230
6 of the Communications and Decency Act. This order agrees.

7 The CDA states that "[n]o provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be
8 treated as the publisher or speaker of any information provided by another information content
9 provider," and expressly preempts any state law to the contrary. 47 U.S.C. 230(c)(1), (e)(3).
10 Put differently, the CDA safe harbor protects internet service providers from being sued based 11 on material published by content providers. Section 230 was enacted "to promote the 12 continued development of the Internet and other interactive computer services" and "to 13 preserve the vibrant and competitive free market that presently exists for the Internet and other 14 interactive computer services, unfettered by Federal or State regulation." 47 U.S.C.
15 230(b)(1)(2). Our court of appeals has explained:

16 The majority of federal circuits have interpreted the CDA to 17 establish broad federal immunity to any cause of action that would 18 make service providers liable for information originating with a 19 third-party user of the service. . . . Because material on a website
20 may be viewed across the Internet, and thus in more than one state 21 at a time, permitting the reach of any particular state's definition of 22 intellectual property to dictate the contours of this federal 23 immunity would be contrary to Congress's expressed goal of 24 insulating the development of the Internet from the various 25 state-law regimes.

26 Perfect 10, Inc. v. CCBill LLC, 488 F.3d 1102, 1118 (9th Cir. 2007) (internal quotations and 27 citations omitted, emphasis added). Section 230 of the CDA bars state law claims against 28 internet service providers based on content created by a third party. Ibid.

Section 230(f)(3) defines a content provider as "any person or entity that is responsible, in whole or in part, for the creation or development of information provided through the Internet or any other interactive computer service." Our court of appeals held that if a website provider displays content "created entirely by third parties, then it is only a service provider with respect to that content." Fair Hous. Council of San Fernando Valley v. Roommates.Com,

1 LLC, 521 F. 3d 1157, 1162 (9th Cir. 2008) (emphasis added). Although plaintiffs’ complaint is
2 cleverly-worded, it does not allege that defendants created the app at issue here. Rather, it
3 appears that the app was created entirely by third parties. Thus, this order holds that for the 4 purposes of Section 230, defendants are internet service providers that host third-party content
5 and not content providers.

6 Plaintiffs rely on Fraley v. Facebook, Inc., 830 F. Supp. 2d 785 (N.D. Cal. 2011)
7 (Judge Lucy Koh), in an attempt to salvage their state law claims, but that decision is 8 inapposite. In Fraley, the plaintiffs, who were users of the Facebook social networking site, 9 accused the company “not of publishing tortious content, but rather of creating and developing 10 commercial content that violates their statutory right of publicity.” Id. at 801. Facebook
11 created new content with information that it took from plaintiffs without their consent —
12 Facebook was therefore a content provider as well as a service provider, and thus not entitled 13 to immunity under Section 230. Here, there are no comparable allegations that defendants
14 created or developed the app at issue (or any other app). The allegations only show that 15 defendants’ HP App Catalogue is an interactive computer service provider. It therefore enjoys 16 the broad immunity provided under Section 230 of the CDA from all state claims relating to 17 publishing content created by third parties.

18 Plaintiffs’ four state law claims — violation of Pennsylvania’s unfair competition and 19 trademark laws and Pennsylvania’s and California’s right of publicity statutes — are 20 preempted by the CDA. Defendants’ motion to dismiss those claims is accordingly GRANTED.

21 CONCLUSION

22 For the foregoing reasons, defendants’ motion to dismiss is GRANTED IN PART and 23 DENIED IN PART. Plaintiffs may seek leave to amend their amended complaint and will have 24 until AUGUST 30, 2013, to file a motion, noticed on the normal 35-day track, for leave to file a 25 second amended complaint. A proposed amended complaint must be appended to this motion.
26 Plaintiffs should plead their best case. The motion should clearly explain how the amendments
27 to the complaint cure the deficiencies identified herein, and should include as an exhibit a 28

1 redline or highlighted version identifying all changes. If such a motion is not made, the answer
2 will be due ten calendar days thereafter.
